

DECOY For thousands of years, Natives Americans across North America used cattails, other grasses, and rushes to make floating decoys to lure waterfowl. Today, Cree Indians around the northern Great Lakes continue this tradition by making standing goose decoys from flexible tamarack sticks. This ingenious use of natural materials to create an alluring appearance can also be found in the Decoy by MossCreek. Our new design features stone, true log veneer, poplar bark siding and antique red pine siding. The interior is entered via an open glass gallery that looks out over the outdoor living and the view beyond. One right turn and you enter into a spacious great room/kitchen/dining area. The main level also features an expansive outdoor living and master suite. The upper level is configured with a two bedrooms and baths and dramatic balcony overlook into the great room below.
